Land and Cultural Survival: The Communal Land Rights of Indigenous Peoples in Asia (PDF)

Asian Development Bank, 2009.

The report examines indigenous people and their communal land management, focusing on how some Asian countries recognize indigenous people's environmental interests and land rights, and engage them in the development discourse. Using case studies from Cambodia, India, Malaysia, and the Philippines, nine experts examine vulnerabilities and opportunities of indigenous peoples. Debunking the notion of tradition as an obstacle to modernization, they find that those who keep control of their communal lands are the ones most able to adapt.

Indigenous Peoples Rights and the Environment: Issues and the Future

Melinda Janki.

High Level Expert Meeting on the New Future of Human Rights and Environment: Moving the Global Agenda Forward, Draft Paper, November 30-December 1, 2009, 21 pages.

The author examines the impact of economic development on the indigenous peoples, focusing on the rights of indigenous peoples to the natural resources on their lands, including the right to participate in management and conservation of those resources.

The Power of Freedom: Uniting Human Rights and Development

Jean-Pierre Chauffour and Susan Aaronson. The Cato Institute, April 23, 2009. Audio and video only. No transcript available.

Are the quests for human rights and economic development compatible?

The author takes the development and human rights communities to task for working at cross purposes and often advocating policies that violate basic rights, whether those rights are economic freedoms or broader issues of personal choice. He examines how the two traditions can be reconciled by empowering people with economic, civil, and political liberty.
